really gorgeous pencil from a kind-hearted individual entirely unknown to me. Then I could not find him to return it. Herewith Mayfair inserts a "Lost and Found Agony Column," and begs to announce that the said pencil was left in all honesty, and with thanks, on the hall-table at Parkwood. Everybody was welcoming back Mrs. W. D. Ross, wife of our Lieutenant-Governor, from her sojourn at Atlantic City. She seemed to bring a delightful whiff from there in the exhilaration that one always finds so stimulating in her conversation. Everybody was there and Mrs. Fiske and Mr. Alfred Beardmore were the nicest couple to do the conservatories with, as both of them are so appreciative of beautiful things. Driving back from Oshawa to Toronto in the Rolls with Mrs. D. A. Dunlap and her guest, Miss Bell, who is prominently identified with the Women's Canadian Club in New York, the latter and I—both truants returned home—revelled in the sweep of sky and gold-pricked clouds that are so spaciouly Canadian after the confined sky-lines of London and New York.

Dr. and Mrs. Herbert Bruce's reception for the Horse-Show visitors was another brilliant event of the month when Annandale was en fête. The artistic rooms have recently had an addition in an upstairs suite decorated in art moderne—a lovely symphony of azure, rose and silver. Mrs. Bruce is always the charming hostess and people just stayed and stayed! Mrs. Arthur Meighen's hands were fluttering prettily over countless tea-cups and some of the pretty assistants were Mary Tudhope, whose Coming-out party I shall tell you about in a minute, Eleanor Ross, Helen McCrea, Lillian Meighen and young Mrs. Bongard. Of course, Maxwell, the Bruces' young son, helped do the honors too. Just a few of those I chatted with (space is devastatingly unjust for descriptions of all these parties) were Mrs. R. Y. Eaton, Mrs. Harold Walker, Col. and Mrs. Ewart Osborne, Mrs. Barwick, Mr. and Mrs. John M. Lyle, Col. and Mrs. J. B. Maclean, Mrs. Russell Blackburn, of Ottawa; Mrs. T. A. McAuley, Mrs. W. H. Price, Major and
