

babies, and rushing from the great show room into the dressing room, she ~~disembowels~~ tears the clothes from her and gets into her own. Unmindful of the sensation she has made in the store, she speeds through the store and blindly plunges through the street till she finds her way home. Nora, her assumed haute-couture completely broken by the big sobs she cannot restrain begs to be let off for that afternoon and hurries after Minette. At their house she finds Minette rocking something in her arms she fancies to be a baby, and ~~sings~~ crooning and singing a little French lullaby. Nora summons a doctor. Minette is taken in an ambulance to the hospital, where for ten days she raves in the delirium of brain fever.

Mrs. O'Rourke having served her sentence is finally let out from Blackwell's Island. Hurrying home, she learns of the tragedy she has brought upon Minette. Overcome with remorse Mrs. O'Rourke hurries over to the Monster Apartments, where Miss Hughes tells her the people she had left her babies with have gone with them away ~~off~~ out to Alberta, Canada. Mrs. O'Rourke, with the last of the money given her by Dick goes to the station and buys a ticket for Calgary. Before leaving she puts the card Dick has given her in an envelope and mails it to Minette, telling her this is the man who has taken her babies, and that he has gone to Alberta.

Minette, convalescing slowly, is brought home by the loving Nora, now subdued and heartbroken, not only by the discovery of Dayton's falsity, but blaming herself for Minette's trouble. She feels
